TRAVEL GEOGRAPHY

Any college interested in this subject should inform the Board as soon as possible. For the 1973 examination the Board will not set a question paper; colleges being required to set their own paper and to mark the scripts internally. The question paper and the marking will, however, be assessed by the Board.

1. AIM

To introduce students to the aspects of geography which closely influence the nature and patterns of travel and the establishment and development of major holiday areas in Britain and abroad.

2. SYLLABUS

NOTE: Candidates will be expected to:

- (a) be able to produce and interpret simple sketch maps and statistical maps and diagrams;
- (b) be able to locate the major land masses, oceans, continents, major mountain areas and rivers and recognise and describe features associated with the major land forms;
- (c) have studied the distribution of world population and its relevance to the major tourist areas, world climatic patterns and their effect on tourism.

Candidates will be expected to refer to these items when answering questions on specific regional studies.
